Florida Health Care Bills Update

The Florida Senate is working on a bill to accept our tax money back from the federal government to provide health coverage to more than 1 million Floridians. While the LWV is not perfectly satisfied with every aspect of the bill, it is a good starting point and seems to have bipartisan support. The Florida House so far is refusing to consider a companion bill, without which there is no possibility of accepting the funds. The governor has stated his lack of support for the expansion.

The House is hoping that the federal government will agree to renew the waiver that provides funds to help hospitals cover the cost of caring for the uninsured. The other issue affecting the discussion is the question of how the Supreme Court will rule on the availability of subsidies for people who enrolled in health insurance through the federal website. This decision is expected in mid-June. Many are expecting the final budget to be determined in a special session which will be scheduled in June.

Education Team Update

The education committee met in March to discuss education-related legislation currently making its way through the Florida legislature as well as to make study plans for the upcoming year. SB 1448 and its partner bill in the House HB7037 as well as PCS SB 1552 deal with Diane Dimperio and Janet Allen spearheaded the efforts of our local Health Care team. They also were helped by our interns in crafting a brochure designed to be taken to businesses.

The League of Women Voters (LWV) was founded in 1920 and is strictly nonpartisan. It neither supports nor opposes candidates for office at any level of government. The LWV takes a stand on political issues only after carefully studying them and coming to a consensus on a position. It works to increase understanding of major public policy issues, and to influence public policy through education and advocacy, as well as through political lobbying of Congress. The work is done primarily by committed volunteers operating at the local state and national level.

DO YOU KNOW? WHO'S in the GAP? WHY SHOULD I CARE?

- The Federal Government wants to return $5 Billion a year of our own tax money.
- This would provide health insurance to hundreds of thousands of low income Floridians who are caught in the "coverage gap".
- If Florida does not accept this money, our tax dollars will be used by other states.
- Refusal of this money will cause insurance premiums to go up even more.
- Not all low-income people are eligible for Medicaid.
- $2 BILLION that Florida hospitals receive to pay for services to the uninsured will end in 2015.

Most people can afford health insurance because part of the cost is paid for by their employer or comes from public funds. However, many people with the lowest income in our state cannot get financial help to buy health insurance. They are not eligible for Medicaid nor are they eligible for premium tax credits through the federal website, called the Market Place. These people are in a "coverage gap". The Federal Government has offered Florida $5 billion per year to help us close the gap but our legislature must accept these funds, which they have refused for the past two years.

People without health insurance tend to wait until they are very sick and then go to the emergency room where health care is very expensive.

Hospitals bill the insured population more to pay for the uninsured. (Each insured family now pays $1900 more annually to cover this cost.) If we do not "Close the Gap", the cost of insurance will increase even more.

The University of Florida estimates that if we "Close the Gap" about 120,000 jobs will be created in all areas of the Florida economy.

Report from Our LWV Interns

Donna Waller supervised interns from Santa Fe College this semester, including bringing them to the LWV Florida Impact Days in Tallahassee. One came to our April board meeting to give an oral report, and another shares his poster presentation below.

By Zack Swartz

I'm from St. Augustine, Florida, and moved to Gainesville to go to Santa Fe College then transfer to the University of Florida. I'm working to attain my Bachelor's in Political Science, while also holding a part-time job. After I graduate from the University of Florida, I aspire to obtain a career with the C.I.A. as a political analyst.

My time spent as an intern for the League of Women Voters has been priceless; I have always had an appreciation for politics and always intended to have a career relating to it, but until now, I could never describe this appreciation as a passion. Thanks to Katy and Donna, as well as my fellow interns Giselle, Cody, and Ariella, my desire to be politically aware and civically engaged has never been so well-defined.

While I learned a lot about myself and what I want from life, I also learned some valuable lessons that are sure to be helpful in furthering my future career. I gained extensive field experience interacting with state legislators on a face-to-face basis, maintaining a professional composure in chaotic high-stress environments, and have had countless opportunities for networking with peers in my field of study. While I hope to continue my involvement with the League of Women Voters in the coming future, it also became clear to me in my time spent this past semester that there's only so little time in a week, and I learned that it can be extremely easy to spread yourself too thin. ## By Giselle Zamorano

I grew up fending for myself. My mom says I grew like wild grass. I laugh at her apologetic comment, now, remembering how hard she worked to give my brother and I shelter. Life was that way for many kids I knew; it was normal. Voting, however, was never a norm. I never saw anyone I knew vote or even talk about the subject. We were all just worried about having something to eat, somewhere to sleep, and making sure everyone was safe. As I grew up, I became more familiar with the idea of voting. I learned people had died to have the right to vote and I learned the philosophy behind it. Later, I was told it was all just a farce. That the people at the top didn't care about the people at the bottom and that we just had to accept it. Some people said we should revolt and others opted not to be part of "the system" at all, living off the grid and fending for themselves in the wild. I wondered why we couldn't just fix the system. I thought, why don't we just vote for what we do like and against what we don't? So, when I turned 18, I registered to vote and when elections came around, I voted.

Reporting to LWVAC board

Although I don't remember anyone else in my life voting, I do remember plenty of complaints. No one seemed happy at all. From the punks crying anarchy, to the gangbangers and drug-dealers complaining about the jail system; the illegal immigrants wanted to be legal, the National Women's Organization wanted women to be treated as equals and the environmentalists blamed the creeping death of our planet on our government ... no one was ever happy. "The system" seemed to have failed everyone around me, yet I saw opportunity for improvement (Read More)

Summary of Hot Topic Program on Net Neutrality

By June Girard

League members met at Jason's Deli on Wednesday, March 18 to hear Shubho Bandyopadhyay discuss Net Neutrality for a Hot Topics meeting. He has a Ph.D. from Purdue University and his areas of research include Net Neutrality and Information Systems Policy. His work has been cited by Google in its filing to the FCC in support of Net Neutrality.

He illustrated how the cloud or broadband enables information from a variety of sources to be sent to remote data centers that repackage the data and pass it on to users. Some large and wealthy firms could pay for their data packets to have priority delivery. The FCC voted on February 26 to reclassify broadband Internet Service Providers (ISP's) as public utility firms like water and electricity providers. This reclassification makes them subject to much more federal regulation than they had as telecommunication firms.

In an effort to make the internet equal to all, regardless of size or money, the FCC will make regulations to accomplish that "net-neutrality." Professor Bandyopadhyay explained that "band width is simply enormous" and not the limiting factor for information transfer. Europe's and many other countries' internet are much faster and cheaper than the United States, so it is not an internet problem. Without "net-neutrality" the concern was that big companies or paid users would get the fast lane and the rest a slow lane. This will change as a result of the FCC decision.
